

ESSENTIAL CIVIL WAR CURRICULUM

Matthew Hintz received his Bachelor of Arts in History from Hiram College, located in Ohio's historic Western Reserve region, and his Master of Arts in History from Clemson University in Clemson, South Carolina under the supervision of H. Roger Grant and O. Vernon Burton. Presently, he is a doctoral student in American history at the University of North Carolina Greensboro where he is also earning a minor in the Atlantic World, as well as a Post-Baccalaureate Certificate in African American Diaspora Studies. His dissertation will examine Oberlin, Ohio and its idealism as the community transitioned from the Civil War to international missionary work. He has recently published a book review in North Carolina State University's journal, The Graduate, as well as presented research on religion and reform on Ohio's Western Reserve at the North Carolina Association of Historians Annual Meeting. Hintz has also presented at several other conferences, notably on the subject of radical abolitionism in Ohio at the Ohio Goes to War Conference in Cleveland (2011), and a paper on the Red Cross and Progressivism during WWI at Clemson (2016). In addition to being a historian, he is a trained professional actor and stage manager, having worked at various theaters and artistic festivals in the northern Ohio region.
