

Michael A. Martorelli spent 45 years fulfilling roles in investment research, money management, and investment banking. He was also an adjunct finance instructor and guest lecturer at several colleges and universities in the Philadelphia area. Combining his interests in finance and history, Mr. Martorelli has authored more than a dozen articles and book reviews for Financial History, the Magazine of the Museum of American Finance. He wrote about Civil War Artillery and Financing the Civil War for the Essential Civil War Curriculum. He is a veteran of the Pennsylvania National Guard and U.S. Army Reserve; in the latter service he served as the supply officer for a Civil Affairs unit. He is a reenactor in units portraying both Civil War and World War II soldiers. During the 1970s, he earned a BS in Business Administration and an MBA from Drexel University in Philadelphia. In 2011, he earned an MA in History from American Military University.